A Woman Marries a Woman.

Special Dispatch to Daily Republican.

MILWAUKEE, October 29.--One of the most remarkable cases of deception, in which a woman has successfully, for over ten months, masqueraded as a man, has just been brought to light at Wauchum, in this State. Not only has this woman appeared in public in male attire and until lately been considered a reputable young man, but in May last she was married to Gertrude Fuller, a girl of 19, with whom she has since been living. It was frequently remarked by Miss Fuller's parents that Frank Dubois, which was the name by which their son-in-law was known to them, was rather effeminate in his actions, but they did not give that matter much consideration. It was in January last that

THE EFFEMINATE YOUNG MAN

Made his appearance in Wauchum and procured lodgings at the house of Mr. Fuller. He soon formed an acquaintance with Gertrude, and they became fast friends. Frank claimed to be an artist, and succeeded in getting employment, thus enabling himself to live comfortably. He gave Gertrude lessons in drawing, and the acquaintance of a few days ripened into love on the part of the latter, and, perhaps, also of the former. They were frequently seen in each others company at balls and entertainments, and when the intelligence leaked out that they were engaged to be married, there was little surprise manifested. The wedding day was set for the 9th of May, and on that eventful occasion they were united in wedlock by the Rev. H. L. Harrison at the home of

THE DECEIVED BRIDE.

There was a jollification that night, and since that time Mr. and Mrs. Dubois have been residing at the residence of Mr. Fuller. Frank Dubois continued his vocation as an artist, and as the result of his labor succeeded in making his wife feel happy. Everything went on smoothly until a few days ago, when it became whispered around that Frank Dubois was not a man, but a woman, and the fugitive wife of S. J. Hudson, of Belvidere, Illinois. Mrs. Hudson had left her husband a few days before Frank Dubois had made his appearance at Wauchum, and this, together with his rather feminine actions, led to the belief that there was something wrong. Mr. Hudson was communicated with, and his arrival in Wauchum has resulted in the

DECEIVER BEING UNMASKED.

Mr. Hudson started for Belvidere in company with his two children, in answer to a letter sent him that his wife was supposed to be at Wauchum. He went directly to that place and to the house of Mr. Fuller. He asked to see Mr. Dubois and was ushered into the presence of his runaway wife. On seeing him she fainted, but soon recovered consciousness, when an explanation followed. She said that Gertrude Fuller was not aware of her identity, and had, up to the time of the arrival of her husband, been of the belief that she had been married to a man. The grief of the deceived wife Gertrude is unbounded. Mrs. Hudson says she will not go home with her husband.
