Boulder protects trans-sex rights

By Sheba R. Wheeler

Denver Post Staff Writer

Feb. 2 - BOULDER - The city has become the first in Colorado to extend civil rights protections to the transgendered. Amid a round of applause, council members Tuesday night unanimously approved an amendment to the city's 27-year-old Human Rights Ordinance that legally protects transgendered residents from discrimination in housing, employment and public accommodation.

Boulder joined the ranks of seven other cities, including San Francisco, Seattle and Pittsburgh, that have similar measures.

Boulder's action might jump-start a state wide trend, said Nick Sarchet of Equality Colorado. Sarchet said his organization is working with Denver, which is considering a similar proposal. "It's very important for Boulder to take a stand against this type of discrimination," Mayor Will Toor said.

"It would be great if we didn't have discrimination," said Councilwoman Lisa Morzel. "But that's not the case. People need to be able to live and have money to get housing and to feed themselves."

While a few of the municipalities placed transgendered clauses among expanded definitions of sexual orientation or gender, Boulder named its transgendered population as a new protected class.

Under the amendment, "gender variants" are those who have a "persistent sense that a person's gender identity is incongruent with the person's biological sex." Officials say about 400 people in Boulder would meet the gender-variant definition.

Out of the 20 or so people who spoke during the public hearing, only two opposed the amendment, primarily because they said granting protection to a specified group would cause more societal divisiveness.

"I oppose adding lifestyle changes to the ordinance," said Boulder resident Janet Bellis. "It blurs the lines between acceptable and un acceptable societal behavior, especially for our youth. It's unnecessary because we are all awarded constitutional rights against discrimination. And I really think that creating small protected classes is discriminatory in its own right." But council members overwhelmingly responded to the majority speakers, some of whom chronicled personal tales of jobs they'd lost and housing they'd been refused from coworkers, bosses and managers.

"I lost my dad on Jan. 20 to colon cancer," said Wendi Madsen, a transgendered resident. "Because I was so unaccepted by my mother, she saw no reason to inform me of his passing. You can't legislate against my mother's intolerance or her biases. But you can adopt this ordinance and say Boulder won't tolerate discrimination."

Under Boulder's ordinance, employers can require "reasonably consistent gender presentation" from gender variant workers, stipulating a maximum of three changes over an 18month period.

Those under 21 would also be protected by the ordinance, but they would not be required to routinely maintain one gender identity as would transgendered adults.

City staff received the most opposition - albeit one phone call and one letter - from two local health clubs questioning the ordinance's requirement of "reasonable accommodation" in locker rooms and shower facilities for the transgendered.

If separate facilities are not available, the ordinance stipulates that "reasonable accommodations" be granted that may include restricted access to the facilities of the sex they are changing to.

Charming San Francisco can satisfy all interests

By Arthur Frommer

(taken from the Riverside Press-Enterprise (Published Oct. 10, 1999))

There's really no doubt about it: Few American metropolises manage to muster the panache and just plain across-the-board appeal of this much-sung, hilly melting pot by the bay. San Francisco's charms include, of course, the usual suspects: Fisherman's Wharf; fascinating ethnic pockets that go well beyond Chinatown; architecture liberally sprinkled with gracious Old World-style and push-the-envelope modern; and, of course, those endearing little cable cars climbing halfway to the stars.

But there's more: When you're talking about a destination that's not overwhelming, yet truly "has something for everyone," you really can't do better than San Francisco. It's easy on the eyes and fairly uncomplicated to get around, with an embarrassment of riches in the shopping and eclectic dining department, and ditto for culture aimed at those high, low and nonexistent of brow.

This year, the biggest novelties in attractions for tourists (and locals, for that matter) seem to be popping up - like so many other cutting-edge developments here - in a formerly slummy, now extremely hip and artsy neighborhood called SoMa (short for South of Market, as it falls south of Market Street and well-know landmarks like Union Square, the financial district and Nob Hill).

They include two family-friendly behemoths. first, Sony's 5-month-old Metreon entertainment complex (www.metreon.com), which has received national attention for its IMAX theater and elaborate, kid-themed restaurants, shops and play spaces. Across the street, the year-old Rooftop at Yerba Buena houses a huge bowling and ice-skating centers, plus a cool arts and technology studio for young people.

While in town, why not consider - in place of those canned, relatively pricey bus excursions - some walking tours given by people with a real devotion to their city and subject matter? A top contender is Jay Gifford's delightful Victorian House Walks (415-253-9485), conducted daily at $20 a head. check out other aspects of local history with the Haight-Ashbury Flower Power Walking tour (415-863-1621, $15); Ms Trevor Halley's "Cruisin' the Castro" look at Frisco's extremely influential gay culture (415-550-8110, $35 including full lunch); and the coffee-house culture of bohemian North Beach (415-673-9255, $20).

For the more conventional tourist attractions, consider CityPass (707-256-0490; www.citypass.net; it also has versions in five other tourist-popular American cities). One price ($29.95 adult; $19.95 seniors, $17.95 under 18) not only buys you tickets - good for seven days - at up to half off what you'd normally pay, but also saves you from standing in ticket lines. You buy your CityPass at the first attraction or through the local convention and visitors bureau.

In San Francisco, it gets you into the Exploratorium; the California Palace of the Legion of Honor; a Blue & Gold Fleet cruise on the bay, under the Golden Gate Bridge and beyond; the California Academy of Sciences; the M. H. de Young Memorial Museum; the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art; and the San Francisco Zoo. Local hotel partners that provide discounts include the Hyatt Regency and Grand Hyatt (800-233-1234). The Hyatt discounts, while not half bad, are out done by some properties in town - although in San Francisco anything below $100 a night can be considered "budget."

And while not exactly famous for cheap eats, San Fran does harbor a few budget stars where you can get a solid, hot dinner for $10 or less per person; the Café Museo in the Museum of Modern Art; the Grove Café at 2250 Chestnut St. in the Marina district; a "healthy" Mexican restaurant called Sweet Heat, with locations at 3324 Haight St. in the Marina and 2141 Polk St. in Nob Hill; Capp's Corner, a family-style Italian restaurant at 1600 Powell St. in North Beach; and Tana, a modern Ethiopian café at 4238 18th St. in the Castro district.

There's an abundance of information on all this and more at the San Francisco Convention and Visitors Bureau (415-391-2000; fax on demand 800-220-5747; or www.sfvisitor.org).
